

---

Is this the right tool for the job?

Posted by alice123 - 2008/08/11 23:16

---

I'm new at networking and I want to start making my own network wires/cables for my office. I ordered this crimping tool from www.liducor.com (crimper should be here in a few days) and I wanted to learn if there are any other kinds of network cat5 wire crimping tools out there that would work better? <http://www.liangdianup.com/inventory/459901.htm> is the location for the crimp pliers on their website, those are the ones that I bought. Funny that it says Germany on the handle of the pliers but I would guess they are made in China since the company I bought them from is in China. If you know of a name of a certain cat 5 wire crimper that would be better for me to use then please post it here. Thank you :)

=====

Re:Is this the right tool for the job?

Posted by natfunk71 - 2008/09/07 03:20

---

I bought mine from RADIOSHACK. They come with a couple of cable ends. It looks just like that German/Chinese deal you got. My tool works quite well. They also sell tool-less ends that you can use as well. They work pretty good if you're not doing a million of them.

=====